Media coverage:

- The top story in this morning's clippings continues to be the trucking protest. Postmedia reporting that the Ottawa core is in chaos and under turmoil with local counselors demanding that the federal government step in and take over security.
- Canadian Press (National Observer, CityNews); Radio-Canada; Presse Canadienne Reporting that the federal government and industry groups are searching for supply chain solutions to help ease the back-ups and prevent future flare ups. The article goes on to report that the number of commercial truck drivers entering Canada dropped by 2.8 per cent between the weeks of Jan. 10-16 and Jan. 21-27, according to statistics from the public safety minister's office and the Canada Border Services Agency. To put that into context, during the same period in 2021 The number of truckers crossing the border fell by 1.1 per cent and by seven per cent in 2019.
- Meanwhile CBC News is reporting on comments made by Transport Minister Alghabra Monday who said that there is no sign whatsoever that the volume of transport trucks crossing the Canada/US border has decreased as a result of the vaccine mandate imposed on truckers.
- CTV News Calgary Herald; CBC News; Toronto Star; Bloomberg (National Post) reporting on the truck blockade at the US border in southern Alberta that is entering its fourth day. RCMP issued a statement last evening saying that the protest is no longer lawful and resources will be in place to make arrests and tow away vehicles. Alberta Premier Jason Kenney, who last week had been called the voice of the convoy by media, has said it's up to local authorities to enforce provincial legislation. Adding in a statement posted to twitter that "If participants in this convoy cross the line and break the law, I expect police to take appropriate action."
